COURSE PHILOSOPHY:

It is necessary for the teacher to organize, develop and evaluate curriculum activities which are in harmony with the needs and developmental characteristics of children. A flexible, transactional curriculum avoids the necessity for all children to proceed through all steps in a curriculum sequence and adapts to the concept that children differ in their abilities and modes of learning as well as in their needs and interests. The advantage of a flexible curriculum design is that it is easy to incorporate new teaching strategies and varied instructional materials as they are needed. (Wm Fowler)
